PRESS NOTE.

Production of Civil Goods in Ordnance Factories.

Before and during the war the number and size of India's Ordnance Factories increased considerably and much modern plant and machinery was installed. The number of men employed increased greatly and at the peak of munitions production, was almost eight times the number employed before the war.

The rapid collapse of Japan naturally entailed a substantial reduction in the output of munitions. While sufficient munitions production continues to preserve the technique of the many highly specialised processes involved in the manufacture of weapons, ammunition and explosives, it was evident that the labour force employed on munitions in the war must fall substantially in peace.

To obviate unemployment, the Ordnance Factories undertook the manufacture for civil requirements, mainly Government requirements, of a certain amount of steel (in lieu of steel which would otherwise have to be imported), of tools, jigs, fixtures and gauges in their finely-equipped toolrooms, and of some miscellaneous items.

In view, however, of the needs of the country for re-habilitation generally, for building programmes, tools, etc., Government consider it necessary, as a temporary measure, to make a fuller use of the capacity of the Ordnance Factories for the manufacture of those civil articles for which their plant and machinery can be utilised without extensive re-tooling. This will assist the public in obtaining items unobtainable or not readily obtainable, from other sources, and will enable industrial factories to devote more capacity to restoring and to expending lines of manufacture for which they were more particularly designed or equipped, and which also are in acute demand. The Ordnance Factories will now be open therefore to undertake orders on a wider scale for articles of the type indicated, for heavy steel forgings and castings, stampings, presswork, non-ferrous metals, light and medium parts for machinery, and wood-ware of various descriptions. The Additional Director General (Munitions Production), Park Street, Calcutta, will assign orders to the particular Ordnance Factory or Factories suitable to the production of the various items, and will by advertisement indicate the officers who will quote specifications, prices, etc.

It is emphasised that Government is embarking only on a short-term policy of assisting re-habilitation and industrialisation, and of relieving unemployment and of keeping skilled personnel in practice.

The Indian Ordnance Factories invite enquiries for the manufacture of ferrous and non-ferrous materials, forgings, castings, light and medium machined parts, pressed and fabricated articles, wood-ware, special tools, jigs, fixtures and gauges, and certain chemicals and explosives.
